WHITE TOP

Last week Dr A. B. Brooks and his out of doors school for nature study were camped at the White Top on Cheat Mountain. Here is ideal camping, with water handy, in a saddle of Shavers' mountain, four thousand feet above sea level, shut in from the north and south by higher points, but a clear view to the west and to Barton Knob, and a long look see eastward through Cheat Pass to the parallel ranges which are the Alleghenies. Many acres of the old White homestead and stage coach tavern stand still remain in heavy sod, but the surrounding Canadian forest growth of spruce, yellow birch, hard maple and the like is surely closing this century and more old gap in the ranks.

You know, I hold the forest in deep respect—almost reverence—and I revel in the realization that soon the scars of man's mad commercial orgy which di-figure our mountains are to be healed over by the living touch of the hand of nature. But then, I love the open places in the forest, where homes of men have been; where the sun comes in, and there is grass; room to look up and out and around; relief from oppression of continuous shade. These open places allow the gentle breezes to come and blow away the pestiferous deer flies and black gnats and then there are thickets which stick closer than a brother. If you catch my meaning, them breezes are a great relief and no small blessing, while you get the gnats smoke to going.

The White Top is now one of these holes in the forest; a pleasant oasis that I trust is soon to be under the wise care and management of the United States Forest Service. I ask them to keep it open, as a sunning place for forest denizens and a checking up place for men to look up and out, for to see the wonders of creation, not to be pestered with flies. I like my nature diluted of its punkies.

Right here I want to scotch for all time that White Top was the place and the Whites who lived there were the people connected with the tragedy down on Cheat river where one woman of a household of three women came up missing one day—dead under the fallen chimney. Circumstantial evidence appeared to indicate the poor woman had been slain by a blow from a seng hoe in the hands of the other woman; her body placed by the chimney, and the key stone pulled out to cause it to fall.

The Whites at White Top tavern were a respectable family and their descendants to this day bear good names. Competition between stopping places was strong, and I have no doubt tall tales were told to gullible travelers about the tavern in the black forest, to induce them to stop for the night.

Once there was a traveler who was filled with big talk about the White tavern, but decided to press on across the mountain anyway. His horse gave out and he had to stop at White Top. He made up his mind to keep awake all night and if all came to all, he would sell his life dearly. Along about four o'clock in the morning he heard the old lady tell the old man he had better be getting up if he were going to kill him, and the axe was behind the woodshed door. The traveler got his pistols ready, and listened to the old man as he pattered around in the kitchen; finally the outside door creaked open and all was silence until the old rooster squawked out at the barn. The traveler said his host had to call several times to get him up a few hours later to a chicken breakfast.

The new road across Cheat heads around rather than over White Top. I do not mind this so much if the old turnpike will be kept in condition so that the interested tourist can turn aside from the main highway to visit and study out the fortified camp of General J. J. Reynolds, Union Army, fall of 1861. The evidence is still plain, but I must defer writing of it, until I can devote a whole chapter to it. Before I do this I will go back and waste a day for Uncle Harvey Cromer with much profit to myself. Suffice it here to say, from this camp large armies were sent against the Confederates; one to be repulsed at Greenbrier Bridge in October, and the other to be defeated at Alleghany Top in September. Colonel Albert Rust, of Arkansas, crept through the woods with 1500 men, to attack White Top. He took the picket guards and they told him there were 5,000 men in the fortified camp. That and the fact that spruce trees with the limbs on them, tops pointed, out, had been arranged as entanglements bucket the Colonel clear out. The force refused to attack, and with drew in the woods, while Gen-

4-H Club Notes

On June 28th the Bartow Trail Blazers 4-H club was entertained at the home of Mr and Mrs Harper Beveridge by Mary Frances, Bessie and Woodrow Beveridge. The meeting was a social and business meeting combined. A short business meeting was held in which it was decided our public meeting would be held on July 12th and our next regular meeting would be held on July 27. The meeting was then turned over to the hostesses. Several interesting games were played and delicious refreshments were served.

Doris Snyder, Reporter.

The Swift 4-H club met at the home of Genevieve McKenney, June 21, 1935. We had a good program, several songs, yells and games. We adjourned to meet the 19th of July.

Madge Beveridge, Reporter.

The Pop To-Win 4-H club held their yearly council here, June 19. We met at a scenic place called "Cliff Hill" which was chosen by the majority of the club members. In spite of rain and bad weather, we did our best in performing our stunts and carrying out our plans. We were very much pleased to have Miss Musgrave, Miss Pauline Cunningham and Miss Doolittle to assist in making our program more complete.

We divided into two tribes, Mingo and Delaware, with Golda VanReen as chief of Mingo and Bertha VanReen as chief of Delaware. Rules of the council were given by each member and also scout reports. The Mingo tribe won overwhelmingly in their challenges, while the Delaware took the lead in stunts. We had harmonica music. All seemed to have a fine time considering the weather and disadvantages we faced. After our performances were over we served refreshments and adjourned to meet again July 18, for a special meeting.

Bertha VanReen, Reporter.
